Tintic Silver Jubilee 2021 Grand Marshals Ron & Norma Nelson

Ron and Norma Nelson were born and raised in Eureka and they recently celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary at Sundance with family and friends. Ron served his country in the Navy for four years; after returning home from military service, he began working for Dugway Proving Grounds where he worked for 35 years. Norma had numerous jobs throughout her life and enjoyed time spent working with her Eureka friends.

The Nelsons were active in the community and enjoyed supporting Tintic High School activities from the time their children were in school to the 42 years Ron served on the Tintic School Board. Ron graduated from THS in 1955 where he served as the Student body president. Norma graduated in 1981 after going back to school to finish her high school diploma. Their children Lee, Teresa, Sherry and grandson Derrick, were also graduates of Tintic High. Ron served as the secretary for the Tintic Elks Lodge 711 for 36 years where he participated in numerous service activities for the Eureka community. Norma was always by his side to support whatever he was involved in.

The Nelson family enjoyed camping and hunting and was especially excited when they traded in the old sheep wagon for a brand-new Rancho El Rae trailer. They all have fond memories of deer hunting and Fish Lake camping trips. Golfing and traveling with friends was something they especially enjoyed later in life. Currently their favorite activity is to gather the family in Eureka for monthly parties and celebrations. Their grandchildren Derrick, Angela, Nickolas, Emilee and Bobby have always been an important part of their life. They supported them in whatever endeavors they were involved in and were always their greatest cheerleaders. The next generation of Nelson children include five great granddaughters and three great grandsons. Ron and Norma are proud to be live in the Eureka community and honored to be the Grand Marshals for the Tintic Silver Jubilee celebration.

This is Annie Oakley. She was an American sharpshooter and exhibition shooter, and one of the country's first superstars. Using a .22 caliber rifle, Oakley could split a playing card edge-on and still put five or six more holes in it before it touched the ground...from 90 feet away!

Summertime Mental Health Tips

Although the weather is heating up, the kids are out of school, and the sun is shining, summertime can still be hard on our mental health. Many people think that because there is more vitamin D, there is automatically less mental health issues, but that is not accurate. According to researchers there are many different reasons as to why summertime can bring on the blues, even though the sun is shining (Borges, 2019). Some of these reasons are lack of structure, loneliness, fear of missing out, and unrealistic expectations. If you find yourself feeling a little more anxious or depressed this summer, there are some ways to combat that, here is just a few.

Combating Summertime Blues Tip #1: Evaluate your (and others) expectations of what summer should look like. Social media seems to have influenced our expectations even more and made it harder to be realistic what we can do. A lot of the reason why summertime feels so hard is because we tend to build it up in our head (Borges, 2019). This can look like “during summer I will finally do BLANK” or “this will be the best summer ever.” When we try to reconcile our expectations with reality.

Combating Summertime Blue Tip #2: Children are often times the ones who struggle the most mentally during the summertime. This is due to the lack of structure which they are used to having. To help combat that, plan events like play dates, signing youth up for summer programs such as 4-H or sports, even having them attend daycare can maintain somewhat of the structure they are used to.

Combating Summertime Blues Tip #3: Find ways to keep chilled. Although there is not a lot of research available on the subject, there has been some studies which show that higher and hotter temperatures can exacerbate mental health issues. This can be due to increased daylight, heat stress, and disruptions in biological systems (Whitley, 2021). Finding a way to keep cool during the summer and making sure you are taking a physical inventory when you are going to be out in the heat for long periods of time can help you keep you chill not only physically, but mentally as well.

Combating Summertime Blues Tip #4: Use vacations to your advantage! Science has shown that vacations give us something to look forward to and be excited about. This naturally releases dopamine and can help fight summertime blues. Vacations do not always have to be long or expensive. Research supports that even a quick weekend getaway can have the same effect as having a week-long vacation (Whitley, 2021). That means you can easily take a few days here and there and re-charge and refresh your mind helping you make it through the summer.

Combating Summertime Blues Tip #5: Socialize to stay alive! For some this is easy to do, whereas others may struggle. Being able to connect to a social network can help you avoid the loneliness cycle. Although it may be hard to reach out or put yourself in a new situation, making small talk, creating connection, and looking for opportunities to connect with others can really help this summer.

Although summer does not normally get the rep for being the season of the blues, it can have a negative effect on your mental health. Making sure you are taking care of yourself and helping others take care of themselves can help you fight off the summertime blues and have an enjoyable and mentally healthy summer season!
